

Luke 23:34 – What It Says and What It Doesn't

On a recent installment of Eli James' TalkShoe Internet Radio Show, "Yahweh's Covenant People", there was a dispute over the proper reading of the first part of the Bible verse found at Luke 23:34. The disputed reading of this verse has come to this writer's attention in the past, and so I have thought it necessary to address it further.

Here are the readings of Luke 23:34, from both the King James Bible and the Nestle-Aland Novum Testamentum Graece, 27th edition:

KJV: "Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots."

NA27: [[ὁ δὲ Ἰησοῦς ἔλεγεν· πάτερ, ἄφες αὐτοῖς, οὐ γὰρ οἴδασιν τί ποιοῦσιν.]] διαμεριζόμενοι δὲ τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτοῦ ἔβαλον κλήρους.

Notice in the NA27 Greek, that the first part of the verse, which the KJV translates "Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do", is in double-brackets ("[[]]"). In the NA27, these "indicate that the enclosed words, generally of some length, are known not to be a part of the original text" (Introduction to the NA27).

In the translation of Luke's gospel found on this site (Christogenea.org), the words in question will not be found, because they are esteemed by this translator to be a later addition to Luke. Here are the translation notes on this verse from the full version of my book, The Records of Luke:

40. \aleph , C, and \mathfrak{N} , and A which varies slightly, all insert a sentence before this verse, the subject of which is obviously the Roman soldiers who were assigned the actual execution of the task at hand, which reads: "And Yahshua said 'Father, forgive them. For they do not know what they do.'" \mathcal{P}^{75} , B, D, W, and 070 do not have the sentence. The oldest mss. here are \mathcal{P}^{75} (3rd c.), \aleph (4th c.), and B (4th c.). Here B has been the most consistently followed of the group, and is deviated from on only a few occasions where the evidence is consistent with all or most of the others and combined with other factors it is outweighed, for no one ms. should be considered perfect. Yet here support for B is plentiful among mss. nearly as old, and the one older papyrus. A and W, which so often agree elsewhere, are here divided. \aleph seems also to be victim of several other lengthy interpolations, such as those noted after 22:42 and 23:16. The NA27 includes the passage in its text, but marks it as doubtful.

Yet even though this writer considers the passage to be spurious, its translation shall be addressed here, because many false impressions concerning this passage exist among members of the Christian Israel Identity community. Even though the passage is spurious, it is still Greek, and can be translated properly. Once properly translated, the possible motive for the making of the interpolation may then be deduced.

Again, the Greek of the passage in question (this time without the brackets) is:

Now if one would inspect these words using an interlinear Bible, one may see something like the following (I will supply my own rendering here, since I do not use interlinear Greek Bibles):

ὁ	δὲ	Ἰησοῦς	ἔλεγεν·	πάτερ,	ἄφες	αὐτοῖς,	οὐ	γὰρ	οἴδασιν	τί	ποιοῦσιν.
The	but	Jesus	was saying	father	forgive	them,	not	for	They know	what	They do.

Many people, all of them ignorant of Greek grammar – which has forms and rules which are quite specific in many ways – have seen this verse and opined that by moving a single comma this verse should be read: “Father forgive them not, for they know what they do”. These same people insist that this supposed reading is legitimate, because they “saw it in an interlinear bible”. Yet interlinear bibles do not change the word order of the original text! They merely place an English word next to each Greek word, in the order in which the Greek was written. Greek word order is not the same as English, and we cannot assume that it should be!

There are two ways to demonstrate here that the negative particle, translated “not” in this verse in the KJV, was translated properly:

The first is by examining Luke’s placement of the same negative particle (οὐ, οὐκ, or οὐχ, all different forms of the same word) everywhere else it is used and modifies a noun, verb or adjective. Every example of this in Luke’s writing (all of them listed below) shows that wherever the negative particle is used in such circumstances, it precedes the word which it modifies. There are no exceptions to this practice in Luke’s writings in over 150 occurrences! (See the table at the end of this document “Occurrences of the negative particle in the Gospel of Luke”.)

The second is the use of the Greek word γὰρ, translated “for” in this verse in the KJV. Greek word order in sentences is quite different than that of English, and one must be careful using when an interlinear bible. The Greeks had a strange practice of consistently placing some words, which logically begin a sentence, not as the first word of a sentence as English does, but rather after the first word (or sometimes even phrase) of a sentence. The words γὰρ and δὲ, which both appear in the verse in question here, are both treated in this manner by Greek writers. I have never seen an exception to this practice in Koine Greek.

Liddell & Scott say in the 9th edition of their Greek – English Lexicon of the word γὰρ that “γὰρ properly stands after the first word in a clause, but in the Poets it frequently stands third or fourth, when the preceding words are closely connected...” (p. 338 col. B). Thayer, in his Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament, on p. 110 under the definition for γὰρ, part IV, fully agrees. This alone unequivocally proves that the word οὐ was properly translated in Luke 23:34 in the King James Bible. The verse surely states: “Father forgive them, for they know not what they do”.

Conclusion:

Luke 23:34 is properly translated in the King James Version of the Bible. While this is one of the few times I have found myself defending this translation, what is fair is fair. It is the meaning of the original Greek which matters most, and not what certain sects wish something to read or to mean.

While this writer does not believe that the clause in question here actually belongs to our original Gospel of Luke, it is clear from the context that the verse – whether it is original or a later interpolation – was clearly meant of the Roman soldiers, who “parted his raiment, and cast lots”, or in other words, gambled in order to determine who would gain Yahshua Christ’s clothing.
